Despatches received here this after-

The latest intelligence received at Rio de Janerio indicated that Bahia and Pernambuco were in a state of tranquility. People were at a so much absorbed in the with no opposition. Rio De Janeiro, Nov. 18,-The United States of Brazil, constituting a federated Republic of the different provinces of the Empireover which Dom Pedro had ruled so long, is an established government. The new republic is to-day acknowledged by every province except Babia in the north. ONE OF THE POTENT CAUSES. Missionary's Explanation of the Bevolution in Brazil,

Washington, D. C., Nov. 18.—Rev. Dr Chamberlain, for twenty-seven years missionary in Brazil, is in the city giving a course of talks at various Presbyterian churches, to which denomination he belongs, on the country of South Ameribelongs, on the country of South America, now the scene of a revolutionry war. Having lived in Brazil more than half of his lifetime, his comments on that country are of value.

"What do you consider the chief cause of the revolution in Brazil?" he was asked by a reporter.

"A very potent cause is the Princess. She married a French Prince, who, coming to Brazil, lost no opportunity for snubbing the people. He was a natural anob, and, in his eyes, a Brazilian evidently amounted to very little, and the fact that the army has gone over to the anob, and, in his eyes, a Brazilian evidently amounted to very little, and the fact that the army has gone over to the revolutionists seems to me to have resulted from the Prince's attitude. Two years ago the Prince's attitude. Two years ago the Prince's ablend from the Prince's attitude. Two years ago the Prince's dation. As a matter of fact, there was a general sentiment throughout the limits of the country for the abolition of the slaves, and they felt that it was not exactly just for one person to assume the entire virtue of an act that was made possible by them.

"Not only did the Princess assume the credit of the act, but through her it reverted to the Catholic Church. The Pope, as soon as the slaves were libererated, sent his blessing to the Princess, and bestowed upon her the golden rose, an honor the church reserves for but very few of those whose acts it approves, and set the that the people reminded the Princess that the golden rose brought ill luck with it, and told her to bear in mind that Queen Isabella, of Spain, and the Empress Josephine, of France, had each had the same honor bestowed on them, and that as they, she would be deposed."

"Would the revolution have been pre-among his subjects."

In the course of a conversation to-day a prominent citizen of Brazil said that ne was conviaced that the men who led the revolution could not retain their i-adership. They are unknown to fame and without followers in their own country. There were two courses open to the revolutionists. They might persulve their own weakness and call a to the revolutionists. They might per-ceive their own weakness and call a convention which would bring together the really representative men of the country, like Sersiva and Dantes, and this convention would naturally con-sider the problem of providing a satis-factory form of Government and settle the question, as to whether Brazil is yet ready for a k-public or whether the im-perial family had better be recalled.

No News at the State Department. ing has been received at the State Department to-day concerning the revolution in Brasil. The failure to receive additional information leads the department officials to believe that the cables have been seized. Otherwise the representatives of the United States would doubtless have kept our Government advised of the progress of events.
Among navy officers no surprise was expressed at the news of the revolution.
Commodore Ramsey, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, said that twenty years ago, when he was in Brazil, there was a general feeling that when Dom Pedro's reign ended a republican form of government would be instituted.
Lieut. Barry, who recently returned from Brazil, says that the change which has come to pass was openly talked of among Brazillans as probably to occur, and they expected it at any time. To the people of Brazil, he said, it could not appear to have been sudden.

passed through the city to-day en route to Washington, and in the course of a short conversation talked freely concerning public affairs.

In regard to the Speakership contest, he professed to have no information beyond what he has gleaned from the newspapers, but said that while his predilections naturally went for Representative Cannon, as a Western man, he believed that Reed would secure the prize, McKinley would make an excellent Speaker, in his judgment, but he was afraid the result of the Ohio election had spoiled the young Napoleon's chances in that direction. He did not know what course would be pursued by the majority in Congress at the ansuing session, but was positive it would be a conservative one. He thought, moreover, that some action would be taken for extending our trade with the Spanish-American States.

The witness took a position beside Kunze in order that the jury might judge as to the similarity between them. This witness' testimony, however, was clearer and more definite than that of his cousin, who preceded him. He identified the salcon by its location and by its interior appearance, and gave its street number as 183 Ashland avenue.

This is the saloon owned by Nehman, and the object of the testimony of the cousine, who, it appears, have just been discovered by the defense, is to break the force of Nehman's testimony. His swidence was of a very damaging character. He swore that on the night of the martier, between 10 and 11 o'clock, O'cullivan, Coughlin and Kunse came into his saloon; that while there they talked together mysteriously and in low tones, and that they drank two glasses of sherry and took a cigar each. The testimony of the Hylanda was introduced by the defense for the purpose of discreding this and showing that it was O'Sullivan and the two Hylands who were in the saloon on the night of May 5, instead of O'Sullivan and the night of May 5, instead of O'Sullivan endler.

Ex-Detective Myer Whalen, who was Dan Couglin's partner when they were both on the police force, was the next witness. He testified that he arrived at the East Chicago avenue police station at about 7:30 o'clock on the night that Dr. Cronin was murdered. Coughlin was there at that time. The witness was asked by counsel to tell the story of the evening, and proceeded as follows:

"Next thing I remember I went into the station and looked to see if there were any reports. I did not go outside the station until 10 o'clock—well, I did not leave there until 12 o'clock.

THE READY RESPONSE

Of the Public to the Appeal in Behalf of the Mother of

CHARLES STEWART PARNELL.

The Irish Patriot-The Associated Press Told Her Story of Want, and before the Sun went Down Her Heart was Gladdened.

New York, Nov. 18 .- On last Saturday morning the Associated Press sent out a dispatch from Bordentown, N. J., telling of the sad condition to which povert had reduced Mrs. Delia Stewart Parnell. The dispatch stated that her house, "Old Ironsides," was mortgaged for $8,000, and unless the sum of $365 was raised at once the mortgage would be foreclosed and the mother of Charles Stewart Parnell would be without a roof over her head. Before the sun went down that night, the telegraph had down that night, the telegraph had brought her enough money to pay the interest and the taxes, and still the money continues to flow in from all parts of the United States. It looks now as though Mrs. Parnell had seen her darkest days, and the wolf is no longer at the threshold of "Old Ironsides." It is probable, from the aid already offered, that the illustrious Irish leader's mother will not only be secure from further want and destitution, but that the sum of the entire mortgage on the place will be raised. Mrs. Parnell's warm heart is filled with gratitude toward her generous friends.
